

GALLERY

LIVING/DINING AREA

HALLWAY

A kitemaker's work belongs to both the earth and the sky. The kite thus forms the transition between these two divided realms. Much like the earth and sky, home and the work space are divided yet connected. Hinged walls allow the kitemaker to change the level of permeability of the space, allowing privacy or an open atmosphere. The long transition of the undulating hallway is reminiscent of a kite tail waving in the wind and guides the visitor to the gallery. Wires connect the floor and ceiling in the gallery and allow for 360 degree views of the kites.